The editors of Health Education Research: Theory and Practice are proud to announce the winner of the second annual Douglas S. Leathar Award. This $500 award is conferred on the author(s) of the research article published each year which best reflects the values that our founding editor strove to achieve with this journal. These values are originality, significance and a strong linkage between theory and practice. This year's award goes to Russell Glasgow, Jack Hollis, Suzanne McRae, Harry Lando and Pierre LaChance for their article on Providing an Integrated Program of Low Intensity Tobacco Cessation Services in Health Maintenance Organization that was published in Volume 6 number 1. The article presented the results of a carefully designed evaluation of a four component program to provide tobacco cessation services to members of a health maintenance organization. The results support the use of low intensity methods and have important implications for providing tobacco use cessation services within organizational settings.
